

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Former Co-workers Partner to Create Groundbreaking Children's Book, The Little Eagle That Could

Atlanta, Georgia – June 17, 2015 – It was once only a dream of Rhonda Trower Williams to be able to live out her desire as a children's book author. She did not know that her time working for Verizon Wireless in Alpharetta, GA would turn her dream into reality.

It was during that time that she would meet her co-author, Marquez Hughley. While conversing about each of their life's purpose, Marquez found out about Rhonda's aspiration to become a children's book writer.

Given that Marquez was already an author of two adult books, he encouraged Rhonda to go after her dream. She told him how she had tried to get started before, but wasn't able to keep up her efforts.

About 3 years later, Marquez had an idea for a children's book that would help children with their decision-making, self-worth, identity, leadership and achievement. He then immediately reached back out to his former co-worker, Rhonda.

After Rhonda heard the book idea, her excitement began to surge. She willingly accepted the offer to write the book with Marquez's assistance. This began their two-year journey & exploration into the world of children's literature.

Now, their vision has become a tangible work. Their inspiring book, The Little Eagle That Could, tells the story of a young eaglet named, Remy, who gets displaced on his way home from school. He goes through many experiences based on his choices. Remy later learns to embrace his true identity, purpose, and destiny.
